

Reflection from Fr. Mike Roach

The second reading of today's Liturgy comes from the Book of Revelation. We hear, "See, I make all things new!" This is God's promise of hope.

In the Gospel, Jesus gives us the model of coming to faith by being in relationship. He says, "I give you a new commandment - love one another." Jesus always sees himself in relation to the Father and others in a bond of love. This command of Jesus is not just a personal one, but one that includes the community of believers. The sign of any Christian community is clear—"See how they love one another." May we, in our own everyday ways, continue to carry out that sign.

As we pray for peace in a very broken world, we ask that we might be the bearers of the peace and love that only comes from God.

Let us continue to celebrate the joy and hope of the Easter season.

*Peace,
Fr. Mike*
